Future flight attendant? Young student interviews an Air Canada Service Director

Feb 01, 2019

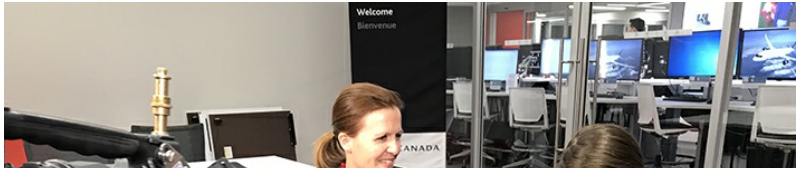

It all started when she was 7 years old and on an Air Canada flight when she helped a flight attendant do her service in the cabin.

Ever since, Joséphine Sainclair Lenoir has dreamt of becoming a flight attendant with Air Canada. Radio Canada in Toronto was there to capture the moment she met one of our service directors

Now 12, the high school student spoke to Emanuelle Lawson at Pearson Airport and was able to ask her about life as a flight attendant and the best parts of the job.

Lawson was thrilled to be able to speak to Joséphine and discuss a career she loves and is passionate about. And Lawson is already looking forward to maybe working with Josephine.

"If we can look in the future six years from now and if she can be on my flight, that would be something to tape. I would love, love to work with her onboard the aircraft," Lawson said.
