Air Canada's Ontario and Quebec passes return to offer unlimited flying this summer for only $1,099

MONTREAL, June 2 /CNW Telbec/ - Air Canada is taking "the road" out of summertime road trips with the return of its Ontario and Quebec summer passes, which provide unlimited intra-provincial flying during July and August for only $1,099.

"Summer is too short to spend in traffic jams so Air Canada is bringing back its popular Ontario and Quebec passes to give people more time for visiting, touring or just lounging on the dock. For less than $600 a month our Ontario and Quebec passes provide our Ontario and Quebec customers a unique opportunity to fly all over and explore their respective provinces during the summer. For a single, up-front payment people buying either the Ontario Pass or Quebec Pass get unlimited flying in July and August," said Charles McKee, Vice President of Marketing at Air Canada.

Available for sale between June 2 and June 26, 2008, the Ontario Pass and Quebec Pass are valid for Air Canada and Air Canada Jazz flights between July 1 and August 31, 2008. The passes provide for unlimited travel, within their respective provinces, between 12 destinations in Ontario and nine in Quebec, with certain exceptions in each province. The Ontario Pass is not valid for point-to-point travel between Toronto and Ottawa (connections involving these two cities are permitted). The Quebec Pass does not permit travel to or from Iles de la Madeleine. Pass prices include the fuel surcharge and all other fees and surcharges except G.S.T. and Q.S.T. where applicable.

The Ontario Pass and the Quebec Pass are the latest addition to Air Canada's growing suite of multi-trip Flight Passes available at www.aircanada.com or for travel agents at www.aircanada.com/agents. Customers can learn more about how to select and use Flight Passes at aircanada.com.
